

The management activity of a repository depends in part on the strategy of the institution and the role that represents the repository. The different management practices in repositories strongly influence the use and potential of each repository.

Thus, both the capacity of the repository manager and the number of resources allocated to it may vary.

Regardless of their specific features and conditions, the repository should ensure the availability and access to the deposit scientific information, allowing their recovery through search.